that a story was coming.

Simply a diamond—an imitation diamond—made by Adolphe Garrier. Where did you see the one you speak of. Homan?

"A pawahraker of remarkable honesty showed it to me," said Homan. "And when I asked him how much he would take for it he laughed and said it was not worth more than 150. I would have thought it easily worth 150. He told me it came from Paris, that was all, except that he more than $20.1 would have thought it came it came from Farls, that was all, except that he said there were no more made like it now. That's it, said budley. Thave no doubt it was one of old Adolphe's productions. I first returned from Ceylon. I had a bag of supplifiers that I had picked up at bargains in the bazars out there, and wanted to find out whether any of them were of any vaine. Most of them, I knew, had what they call silk flushes in them.

Well, a diamond merchant of my acguillatines, to whom I went with my supblires, told me he wanted to introduce me to a queer character, and in that way I met old Garrier in my friend's back office.

"Afterward I improved the acquaintance when I was in Parls. It turned out that Garrier was a cery remarkable chemist."
